Generally really good. Only thing that could potentially be improved is some of the lab exercise examples, where methods that are supposed to result in better predictions, rarely actually show this on the scarce data used. It would be cool to see visually that changing parameters actually can do something. But finding good example data is of course not easy.

I think the course should cover more machine learning methods that deal with high-dimensional data & big data, and some state-of-the-art methods like ANNs.
